Managing Legal Issues

Sometimes, everyday issues can become legal problems. Car accidents, contract disputes, workplace injuries, or criminal complaints are examples of issues that could become legal problems. If you have an issue that is a legal problem, learn about your legal rights and consider working with a qualified lawyer to help you.

- ✓ Don't ignore a legal issue. It will not simply go away, so it's best to face it now.
- ✓ Be knowledgeable about what you are facing. Seek out programs for first offenders and professional legal advice.
- ✓ If you are thinking of pursuing a family law matter like child custody or divorce, check the court's law library for help with research, basic fillings and possibly assistance for a nominal fee via paralegals.
- ✓ A legal issue will take time to work its way through the legal system. Court dates and hearings will not happen instantly. Be patient and trust the process; things will eventually come to a resolution, just not overnight.

Do Your Research

Research lawyers with the state bar association to be sure they are legitimate, have their degree, and are a member in good standing who specializes in the legal issue you need help with.

When in Court

- Be on Your Best Behavior.
- Avoid engaging in any behavior which could cast you in a poor light or bring more trouble.
- Listen and pay attention to the proceedings.
- Dress appropriately and remain quiet unless asked to speak.
